Hello Dr. Makis,

I consider it is importante to tell you briefly how is the situation with my husband, he has been receiving biomagnetism therapy and doing a cetogenic diet and since May his PSA was in 800 now has decrease to 18 (his last exam was yesterday). So considering this new PSA we want to know if he has to take the same dose you send him at the beginning?

I think your treatment should be the next step to cure him because his PSA is a little stuck and does not decrease so fast like the beginning.

Dose you send us:
1mg/kg/day of Ivermectin
222mg or 444mg of Fenbendazole

Thank you for everything.

My Take...

I get emails from around the world and I try to answer them all.

Patients from around the world (hello Ecuador!) are benefiting from Ivermectin and Fenbendazole combination protocols.

This was an intermediate dose protocol, with a starting dose of Ivermectin of 1mg/kg/day and a Fenbendazole dose of 222mg to 444mg a day.

Additional benefit with a ketogenic diet!

Now this is only 3 months in, but I think PSA 800 to 18 is good progress so far.

I've had some USA and Canadian family members tell me recently that their loved ones are too attached to mainstream medicine and are too afraid to try Ivermectin for their cancer. I can't understand such fear, it's literally all benefit and no risk.

Glad to see patients around the world benefiting from Ivermectin and Fenbendazole!

Hi! I am a new paid subscriber as of today...however I was an unpaid subscriber for a while...so very familiar with Dr. Makis and see many podcasts he has been on...

Recently I was able to buy a 100 tablet package of 12mg IVM from a friend that got it through the USA...to have on hand...

I was reading that one could also use IVM horse paste 1.87% IVM for topical use.

I have a patch of psoriasis that showed up 2+ years ago at the back of my neck in my hair line, so it is not noticeable except to my hair stylist.

Do you think I can try the IVM 1.87% paste on the back of my head and that could help?

Also my 16 year old dog has some skin issues, could I apply some on those areas?
